Navan announced that Ingersoll Rand has selected Navan's platform for its global travel management program.

As a global manufacturer serving customers in more than 100 countries, Ingersoll Rand is focused on providing employees with efficient tools that support productivity while strengthening visibility and governance across enterprise operations.

With Navan, Ingersoll Rand is expected to benefit from:

- Enhancing the Employee Experience: Providing employees with a more consistent and intuitive experience for booking, managing, and supporting business travel worldwide while increasing internal adoption.
- Real-Time Visibility and Control: Providing enhanced transparency into travel activity, spend, and policy compliance to support stronger governance.
- Supporting a Global Workforce: Enabling employees worldwide to access travel support whenever and wherever they need it, allowing them to stay focused on customers, productivity, and execution.

"Our priority is giving our global workforce the effective tools that make travel easier while maintaining visibility and governance across our travel program," said Jaime Robles, Chief Procurement Officer at Ingersoll Rand. "As we continue to evolve our travel program, working with Navan will help us strengthen visibility, streamline support, and deliver an intuitive booking experience for our travelers."

"Business travel should be simple for employees and valuable for the company," said Michael Sindicich, President of Navan. "Navan is providing Ingersoll Rand a modern way to book, manage, and support every trip — helping travelers get where they need to go while giving the company greater visibility and control over its travel budget."

The relationship with Ingersoll Rand — alongside recent additions of Insight Enterprises, Evotec, and Cummins — expands Navan's enterprise track record and underscores the platform's ability to handle the complex, large-scale travel requirements of global industry leaders.
